XI. Numb. 26.

THE OBSERVATOR.

el's Lady-day Feaſt. On the Examiner and his Cuckow's Note againſt the Duke of rlborow. The Faction ſorry Plot-Wrights, witneſs their St. Paul's Screw-Plot, Alo- Plot, &c. On Abel's Reflections upon the Dutch Plenipotentiarys for refuſing to treat the French by Word of Mouth.

From Wednesday, March 26. to Saturday, March 29. 1712.

NO doubt, Maſter, you have ſeen Abel's wiſe Paragraph in his Paper of Thurſday laſt, about a mighty Feaſt, and rejoicings that were made by his Friends ay the 25th, as the Day on which our 'd Church (ſays he) doth in ſo remark- anner date its Security: Pray, what do think of it?

think, Roger, that had the Tool or his any Thought at all, they would never publiſh'd their own Folly in ſuch a manner, that Paragraph to contain a villainous upon her Majeſty, as if the Church of had not been ſecur'd during the whole her Reign, till now. And I have ſo more reaſon to call it a villainous Re- becauſe her Majeſty and Both Houſes erly declare, That they were Enemys the Queen and to their Country who ſug- Church was in Danger; and a Pro- was iſſued for puniſhing them accord- or is it a leſs ſcandalous Reflection on he Nobility of Scotland, as Abel ſays e, to hint, that they ſhould join in any ſeems to leſſen the Security of their ch, which is eſtabliſh'd upon an equal ecurity with the Church of England, if the Treaty of Union may be accoun- urity. There are no Scotch Lords, if len of Thought, but know, That the f their own Eſtates and Tenants, de- the Security of their Church; and if of it, let them look back to the Hiſ ir Anceſtors, and ſee what Benefit any ever reap who join'd with an Engliſh ch Faction againſt the Church of Scot- h has always prov'd too burdenſome the greateſt of 'em that have attemp- her. Some of them, no doubt, may that after their Anceſtors had done uld againſt the Church of Scotland in e with the High-Church and Court- hey were abandon'd by both to the ments of their own incens'd Country, were proſecuted as Incendiarys. But of this at preſent, Roger; a Word is e Wiſe.

. Did you ſee the Examiner of the ter? He charges furiouſly again upon f Marlborow.

Obſ. I don't wonder at that, Roger; for the Duke who has ſo often charg'd and routed the French, muſt needs have a very little ſhare in the good Graces of the French Faction. Were the Examiner and his Maſters capable of a cool Thought, they muſt needs perceive that all their Clamours againſt the Duke do but heighten his Merit, and raiſe him in the Eſteem of all the unbyaſs'd part of Europe, if it were poſſible for any Man to have a greater Idea of him than his Glorious Train of Victorys has already impreſs'd on his Mind. It is natural for Men of daſtardly Souls to envy the Brave, and to ſeek the Ruin of thoſe whom they have injur'd. The Examiner's Maſters are very much out in their Politicks, if they think that the Clamours of ſuch an aban- don'd Wretch can in the leaſt affect the Duke's Reputation. His Grace's Character is above the Reach of their poiſonous Breath; and their continual Attacks upon him are only a Proof that he is poſſeſs'd of ſome Extraordinary Qua- litys, which they dread. But they may depend upon it, that it is poſitive Evidence, and not Bawling or Noiſe, which muſt leſſen the Duke in the Eye of the World; and that their railing Accuſations, without daring to bring the Matter to a legal Tryal, ſerve only to convince Man- kind, that his Grace is Innocent, and his Ac- cuſers Guilty. Can any Man think the Duke could form a Plot alone to overcome the Com- mon wealth, as this Libeller ſeems now to inſi- nuate, and as he or his Predeceſſor did formerly charge him in direct Terms? 'Tis ſtrange, if the Thing be true, that they could not find Evi- dence all this while to make ſufficient Proof of it. All the World knows that the Duke is an incomparable General; but he cannot alone make both a General and an Army; ſo that he muſt have communicated his Plot to Somebody that ſhould aſſiſt him in overturning the Govern- ment; 'tis wonderful then, that neither the Money nor the Malice of the Faction can bring in any of them to witneſs againſt him. If he has robb'd the Army of their Bread by whole Waggon Loads, why don't the half-ſtarv'd Sol- diers come to make Proof of it?

Countrym. Why truly, Maſter, the Charge of the Faction, like that of all other falſe Evidence, is inconſiſtent with itſelf, and one part of it con- tradicts another. For my part, was not the Examiner ſuch a Proſtitute as that nobody regards what he says; I think the Duke is very much oblig'd to him, for by this Article of the Charge that he ſtarv'd the Army, he clears him of the other, that he deſign'd to overturn the Commonwealth. Every one knows, that when Oliver laid a Deſign to Uſurp the Government, he careſs'd the Army, becauſe he knew, that without their Aſſiſtance, he cou'd not accompliſh his Deſign. Now, I think, Nobody can doubt but the Duke of Marlborow has as cool a Head, and as warm a Heart as ever Oliver was Maſter of. Then if he had ſuch a Deſign, how came he to be ſo far out in his Politicks, as to diſoblige the Army.

Obſ. Your Remarks upon the Examiner's Evidence, are juſt enough, Roger; I'm very well ſatisfy'd, that if the Libeller gave in ſuch Contradictory Evidence before a Court of Judicature, they wou'd order him a Pillory for his Pains. But let him and his Brother Abel go on, they'll make as good Evidence in time as thoſe Iriſh Men who were employ'd in the Reigns of King James and King Charles IId, to Swear Papiſts out of a Plot, and Proteſtants into one.

Countrym. Indeed, Maſter, I muſt needs ſay, that the Faction ſeems to be deſtitute of Common Senſe. They form their Plots ſo awkwardly, that every Body ſees thro' the Forgery at one View. Their charging the Diſſenters with being the Authors of burning their own Meeting Houſes, with pulling out the Screws of St. Paul's Cathedral, that it might fall upon her Majeſty's Head on a Thankſgiving Day, and their late Mohawk-Plot, which they ſo fooliſhly impute to the Whigs, are undeniable Evidences that they are meer Bunglers at Plot making.

Obſ. You ſay very well, Roger; I remember that there was 50 l. Reward offer'd for any that wou'd diſcover who 'twas that pull'd out St. Paul's Screws, but never heard that any Whig was yet convicted of the Crime, and believe that they will be aſſoon convicted of ſtealing St. Paul's Screws, when he was a Tent-Maker.

Countrym. I fancy, Maſter, if his Screws were now to be come at, the Faction wou'd Steal 'em to Screw up the Church ſtill higher and higher, till St. Paul's over top'd St. Peter's.

Obſ. I don't know but they might, Roger; yet I'm certain they wou'd find themſelves miſtaken in the Effect, for that Apoſtle's Screws were not of a Metal fit for High Church Mechaniſm, but of the ſame ſort with thoſe of his Brother St John, which were for bringing ambitious Diotrephes a Pin lower, inſtead of Screwing him a Peg higher. We are very well aſſured, that all the Apoſtles were againſt Lording it over God's Inheritance.

Countrym. Well, Maſter, I perceive by Abel's Paper of Thurſday laſt, that tho' he and his Maſters are for Screwing the Church ſo High, they are for taking down the Dutch as Low as they can: He wiſely tells us, our Britiſh Miniſters did ſo at Utrecht, becauſe the Hogan Mogan Plenipotentiarys were too High for the French, and wou'd have broke off the Conference, becauſe the Monſieurs ſay, Begar, we vil treat no more wid de Pen, but by woord de Mout; and Abel was at it again in yeſterday's Supplement, where he charges the Dutch moſt Furiouſly for refuſing that way of Treating now, ſince they formerly agreed to it at the Treaty of Nimeguen.

Obſ. I commend Abel and his Maſters for their Wiſdom, Roger; That does mighty well, after they had told us in their laſt Poſt-Boy, that our Miniſters had agreed with the reſt of the Allies, to Demand a Categorical Anſwer from the French in Writing. So that Abel and his Maſters, Roger, like the Satyr in the Fable, can blow Hot and Cold with the ſame Breath. I ſuppoſe that Scribbler, and his Prompters, will make uſe of their great Intereſt to have our Plenipotentiarys recall'd, for being ſo Sawcy to the French, after they had taken down the Dutch.

Countrym. As there was never a more confounded Cauſe than that of the Faction, Maſters, ſo no Cauſe had ever a parcel of more confounded Champions; But let 'em ſay and gainſay, their Days will ſoon be long enough for them to do both, one at Morning, and t'other at Night.

Obſ. They have ſaid ſo much, Roger, and to ſo little Purpoſe, that nobody will henceforward regard what they either Say or Swear, any more than the World does their Maſter the French King's Bona fide. I think the Dutch are very much in the right to inſiſt, that the French Monſieurs ſhou'd Treat wid de Pen, ſince the Treaty of Nimeguen, which Abel's Maſters upbraid them with, was enough to convince them, that there's no laying hold on what the French ſay by Word of Mout. Lewis XIV. is an old Dog at Sweating and Forſwearing, Waerachtigh ſay de Myntheer Daerom, we will Truſt him no more, but unto Hand and Seal.

Countrym. I think they'll be very much to blame if they do, Maſter, Gertruydenberg for that. I'm ſure I wou'd not Truſt him, tho' Abel and the Examiner too, ſhou'd be bound Body for Body, for his faithful Performance. But enough of this at once, Maſter; I've received a parcel of Papers from a Gentleman of Worth and Learning in the Country, that we muſt talk about over a Glaſs of October, the next time we meet.
